MULTICULTURAL TEENS IN AUSTRALIA

WE WANT TO KNOW ABOUT YOUR EXPERIENCES IN MULTICULTURAL AUSTRALIA!

SABA MALIK, 14

I came to Sydney from Pakistan when I was five. I spend a lot of my time with other Pakistanis and I speak Urdu with my family, but I am definitely an Australian. I like it a lot here. At school I have classmates from all over the world. And what do we have in common? We all love hanging out on the beach – barbecues and... cricket! But my friends and I are a bit strange! We like old Australian soap operas, going to Sydney's Wildlife World, and listening to Australian music. We're fans of the Australian pop band Operator Please. I was born in Pakistan, but I can't say I know much about it. I know Australian culture much better.

SAM WIRRPANDA, 15

I'm from Queensland in the north of Australia. I'm Aborigine, but I only speak a bit of our language. I wasn't interested in Aboriginal culture until I was 12 and I saw a local Aboriginal band. They sang and played fantastic instruments. Now I play the didgeridoo – you have to breathe and blow very hard to play it, so it helps with my asthma. I really love an Aboriginal group called Yothu Yindi – they mix rock'n'roll with Aboriginal music. A mix... just like me!

JOHN BISIN, 15

My grandparents were from Italy, but my parents were born here. My mum speaks Italian really well, but she learned it at school in Australia and then she went to Italy for holidays. My dad only knows a few words of dialect. I know a few words too. Italy's really beautiful and I like visiting my cousins, but I feel Australian. Sure, here everybody always asks you, 'What's your background? Where's your family from?' I don't like that much. I know a person's culture is important, especially for new immigrants. But I like talking about rugby or cricket!
